For examples of over 200 isometric projections of events see Predictions playlist and my published books.

Time-space is structured in palindromes. Events are a part of an ever-unfolding Construct and many of these events are equidistant from prior events that are so similar in nature the two events are distinct not in concept but in occurrence.

Many of the following events have already been fulfilled, and some at varying degrees, while others are slowly developing into fulfillment and more are still waiting to be fulfilled. There will also be some that will never be fulfilled as the phenomena they are attached to are absorbed into events that do transpire.

Despite this lack of perfect predictability, the structuring is still valuable as a method of event-prediction. I've never claimed 100% accuracy, and if that standard was necessary then no one would ever take risks like I do in the publicizing of my output. I don't fear criticism because the phenomenon is now too well documented.

There is a calendrical overlap that needs to be addressed. The names of the months infer a 10 month calendar because the Romans added two more months and tucked them in after February. This is why Sept, Oct, Nov and Dec are the Roman months for 7, 8, 9 and 10, but those months today are 9, 10, 11 and 12. This means when we search for events they can unfold in January and February and still be the year 2022. It's an overlap and over and over we find it must be considered.
